Then, the external dimension of these competences are presented more in detail. First, the regime of customs duties and value added tax is analyzed in the light of the rules applicable under the World Trade Organization. Then it focuses on the action of the European Union in terms of income tax ' especially the taxation of multinational companies- and administrative cooperation (information exchange), mainly in the form of soft law instruments and participation in the work of other international organizations such as the OECD. Finally, the use of tax instruments in the context of development cooperation policy, human rights and the environment will be discussed.
