Learning outcomes	At the end of this learning unit, the student is able to: The course aims to critically think about the laws that regulate our lives today as (inter)national citizens. It does so by looking into the complex historical processes of law-making. You will learn to analyse: - The principal shifts in the legal orders of the 19th and 20th centuries; - Fundamental concepts (such as codification, human rights, citizenship, equality, transitional justice, civil rights, suffrage) in their historical context; - Interactions between socio-political and legal dynamics; - The actors of legal change; - The structure of international society; - The construction of the laws of war; - The developments and challenges of international justice. Course material includes powerpoint slides and required texts and sources.
Evaluation methods	The final grade is based on both mandatory regular assessments during the semester and a final evaluation. The criteria and details are given in the course description on Moodle.
Teaching methods	This is a lecture course with compulsory readings and lectures by external speakers. Student participation is also required through mandatory presentations and essays during the semester (see assessment methods).
Content	This course examines legal change in Belgium in an increasingly globalised world since the 19th century. It presents and confronts different genealogies and approaches to the law from a comparative perspective. For each theme, it first presents founding legal texts in contemporary legal history. It then examines the social and political contexts of claims of rights. Finally, it addresses the causes and consequences of the transformation of legal institutions from a historical perspective. The course puts particular emphasis on Europe, the United States and Africa during the 19th and the 20th centuries.
