Learning outcomes	At the end of this learning unit, the student is able to : This course will introduce the students within the field of sociology by showing how it can clarify a wide variety of topics and issues. A recurrent theme however will be modernity. The problems it creates still characterize the challenges of present day society. A thorough questioning offering several interpretations of this matter will deal not only with the classics but also with more recent authors
Evaluation methods	Oral exam. The relative weight will be the following: 2 open questions (15/20) + personal reading (prepared in advance, 5/20).
Teaching methods	This course starts with ex cathedra lectures and invites the students to participate in an active way. Several texts will be uploaded on Moodle. As external source we refer to the manual van Hoof, Jacques & Joris van Ruysseveldt (red.) Sociologie en de moderne samenleving. Students are invited to read the texts beforehand. The chapters that are not based on the manual, will be outlined in a written text that can be found on Moodle. For the whole course, power point presentations will be uploaded on the same digital platform. All this material comes as a support, yet it remains mandatory to attend class and take notes. Besides the students are requested to follow the news on Flemish media and invited to read on their own one of the selected books written by a Flemish researcher or intellectual. The topics selected this academic year will be the following: immigration, racism, the limits of the free market, corona as a symptom of risk society, the quest for a social and sustainable economy, populism and the crisis facing representative democracy. During classes students can - when appropriate - evoke what they read and heard in the media so that we can apply and deepen our sociological understanding. The oral exam will mark the comprehension of what was taught during classes and the personal reading that links up with the course.
Content	This course contains 3 major parts. a) In the introduction we present sociology as an empirical science which distinguishes itself from other behavioral sciences like psychology and biology. Once the specificity of the sociological approach is clarified we tackle its central notions. b) The second part focuses on the central question within the discipline: how to understand the changes of modernity that shake up our society ? Hence we introduce the founding fathers and update their work by referring to more recent authors: Marx – Piketty, Durkheim – Merton / Becker, Weber – Bourdieu / Bauman. c) To conclude the third part will give an overview of the major trends that mark the second half of the 20th century: secularization, postindustrial society, post materialism, globalization, the power of equality and sustainable development with a risk society.
