Evaluation methods	The final assessment is based on a written exam. It includes questions of theoretical and conceptual knowledge, analyses of real situations related to current events and one question on the compulsory readings.
Teaching methods	Description of the ex-cathedra lectures: The lecture is taught jointly or alternately by the two professors in charge of the course. Content	With the transformation of its object, with the pluralisation of its actors, instruments and intervention levels (regionalisation, Europeanization), as well as with a transformation of public action regulation modes (proceduralisation, contracting, evaluation...), the analysis of public action moves away from a state-centred, decisional and linear vision of public policies to a broader study of their construction and implementation processes. From a disciplinary point of view, the analysis of public action lies at the confluence of several approaches of Political Science and Sociology. The issues and themes discussed in class are the following: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> - Definition and delimitation of public action analysis as a discipline: history, object, research fields; - History and historicity of public action (at a macro level: periodisation of public action and contemporary characterisation; at a meso level: sequential approach of public action); - Types and configurations of public action actors (institutional and emerging): administration, parties, interest groups, professional and users as policy makers; - Theoretical perspectives: "instrumental" approach, "cognitive" approach, "neo-institutionalist" approach, "actors" approach; - Scales of public action ("multi-level governance"); - Evaluation of public action: instruments and instrumentalisation.
